The injury from the workplace and making claims for the injury is usually emotionally and physically hard. This is because the injured person should also persevere an injury claim while likewise suffering from the injury.

Under the workers insurance system, employees receive guaranteed compensation for accepted claims in exchange for giving up their right to sue for work-related injuries. The employer finances the program through premiums. This is of benefit to the employer, who is given protection from court cases under this system of collective liability. Injured employees together with their loved ones receive just compensation, whilst expenses are spread among employers.

Nevertheless, staff could take legal action against employers in certain conditions. Staff may sue employers in businesses that are exempt from the workers insurance system. Staff could file a suit against fellow workers if they were "outside the course of their employment" when the injury happened. A worker may be entitled to benefits under the insurance plan with respect to a disease or an injury, and could likewise be entitled to sue an individual in respect of the injury; like for example, an individual driving in the course of their employment could file a suit against the driver of the vehicle which injured them.
