

Divorce Lawyer in Cambridge

Divorce Lawyer in Cambridge - There are a few distinct levels of court within British Columbia, each of which deals with a different part of family law.

Both the Provincial Family Court and the Supreme Court, interim orders for child support, custody, and access could be acquired. Typically, these orders are acquired at the onset of the case, while remaining active until the procedures have ended. Often, an interim order is granted for the father or mother to have complete possession of a particular family asset. With this, the individual is ordered to either maintain possession of it or to sell the possession.

Family cases could unfortunately take many months to close, even with all the efforts of the Supreme Court and the Provincial Family Court.