Cambridge Divorce - Property rights are determined through divorce proceedings in Part 1 and Part II or otherwise known as the Family Law Act. The home's value and the dividing of those assets is specifically dealt with by Part II, while Part 1 focuses on the rest of the assets. Just individuals who have entered into a legal marriage are qualified to take advantage of these laws. Same-sex couples who are legally married are likewise part of this grouping.

Property which has been accrued during the marriage is the only property which is eligible to be divided. "Equalization" is the procedure which is utilized so as to divide the values evenly among the spouses. All through this process, the value for every individual's net family property is calculated. The spouse with the lower net family property value receives half of the difference between their net family properties.

In this situation, the word "property" means everything purchased by the person in addition to all the registered stuff. In the case where anything is registered under both spouse's names, the value is divided evenly between the two.

It is commonly up to the spouses to determine who receives the kitchen appliances and furniture. To have to lawyers determine who must get what would cost much more than the worth of the furniture itself.
